“H.M.S. PINAFORE”

H.M.S. Pinafore, one of the most popular of the shorter comic operas by Gilbert and Sullivan, was first produced in London at the Opera Comique, 25 May, 1878.

ACT I

Captain Corcoran, commander of H.M.S. Pinafore, hopes that his daughter, Josephine, will marry Sir Joseph Porter, K.C.B., First Lord of the Admiralty. Josephine, to her father's dismay, is in love with Ralph Rackstraw, a seaman on her father's ship, but she promises to forgo his love. Ralph, emboldened by the Admiral's praise of the English seamen, declares his love to Josephine and is promptly rejected by the heartbroken girl. On the verge of committing suicide, Ralph is saved by Josephine who admits her love for him, and the two plan to elope despite the dire warnings of Dick Deadeye, a crippled seaman.

ACT II

That same night Captain Corcoran, worried over Josephine's coldness to Sir Joseph, is warned of further trouble by Buttercup, a bumboat woman who secretly loves the Captain. However, he succeeds in persuading Sir Joseph to make one more attempt to win the girl's heart. The Captain's happiness at their apparent success is shattered by Deadeye who warns him of the planned elopement. In stopping the elopement, the Captain uses profanity and is sentenced to be court-martialled by Sir Joseph who also has Ralph cast into the cells for presuming to love Josephine. At this point Buttercup reveals that she had accidentally exchanged Ralph and Captain Corcoran when they were infants. When the two are called before Sir Joseph, Ralph appears as Captain and Corcoran as an ordinary seaman. The opera concludes with Ralph and Josephine, Corcoran and Buttercup united, and Sir Joseph being consoled by the patient Hebe.
